	higher education, research, and professional practices. The programme aimed to reconnect faculty members with India's rich intellectual, philosophical, and cultural traditions while exploring their relevance in contemporary academic and professional domains. The sessions covered diverse themes including Indian epistemology, ethics, leadership, governance, journalism, management, sustainability, wellness, and curriculum design through the lens of Indian Knowledge Systems. The FDP commenced with an inaugural session emphasizing the significance of IKS in holistic education and value-based learning. Eminent academicians and practitioners served as resource persons, delivering insightful lectures on topics such as the conceptual foundations of IKS, dharma-based leadership, Indian knowledge traditions in journalism and communication ethics, and ethical governance models drawn from texts like the Arthashastra, Bhagavad Gita, Ramayana, and Mahabharata. Special focus was laid on integrating IKS into curriculum design, pedagogy, and research, highlighting UGC–IKS frameworks and interdisciplinary teaching-learning strategies. Sessions on applied IKS perspectives showcased indigenous practices for sustainability, wellness, social harmony, and community development. The programme also facilitated meaningful academic dialogue on how Indian Knowledge Systems can enrich contemporary professional disciplines and contribute towards nation-building and Viksit Bharat 2047. Faculty participants actively engaged in discussions, reflections, and interactive sessions, which enhanced their understanding of applying IKS concepts in classroom teaching, research supervision, and institutional practices. The FDP concluded with a valedictory session summarizing key learnings and emphasizing the role of educators in preserving and promoting India's knowledge heritage in modern education systems. Overall, the FDP proved to be an enriching academic initiative that strengthened faculty capacity, er sciplinary perspective the relevance of
